

Writers Resist

Trump won. What do we do now?

Cry, moan softly, descend into deepest despair?

Or we could message each other, seek guidance and camaraderie. We could suck down coffee and talk about what doing something might look like. We could discover a great domain name waiting to be claimed. We could ask for submissions from friends and colleagues. We could start this thing and see what happens.

So we did. ...

Writers Resist is a literary collective born of the 2016 U.S. Presidential Election and a gaggle of MFA grads. Every week, we publish creative expressions of resistance by diverse writers and artists. We are dedicated to challenging all things that diminish our nation's quest for equality, freedom, justice and a healthy planet for all—while having a bit of fun.

Visit www.WritersResist.com. We've just launched, and we're seeking submissions from fellow activist writers and artists.

If you'd like to put your creative gifts into action, join the resistance! Submit and subscribe to www.WritersResist.com—it's free—and spread the word!

Those who profess to favor freedom and yet depreciate agitation, are people who want crops without ploughing the ground; they want rain without thunder and lightning; they want the ocean without the roar of its many waters. The struggle may be a moral one, or it may be a physical one, or it may be both. But it must be a struggle. Power cedes nothing without a demand. It never did and it never will.

– Frederick Douglass